

History of Waupaca County, Wisconsin (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from History of Waupaca County, Wisconsin
In settling a new country the pioneer has much that is unpleasant and discouraging to contend with. Unbroken forests must be cleared away, or the tough sods of the prairie turned under, and the fields fenced and fitted for cultivation. Crops must be planted, and time given for them to come up, grow and mature. In the meantime the old settler must live. His family can not be carried safely through without food and clothing, coarse and scant, perhaps, but sufficient to sustain nature. How to procure them is often a difficult question with him. It is quite common to see the hungry wolf at the door, literally as well as metaphorically. His is a constant struggle with want, aye, even hunger and cold; but he must live, and he struggles on, often disappointed, but ever hopeful, for the blackest cloud may, and generally does have a silver lining. Is it any wonder that so many saint by the way, that so many get discouraged and return to their old homes, perhaps in the far East?
